PRESS RELEASE
Olomouc 15. 7. 2021

The Telegraph Gallery in Olomouc transmits the second signal from Robert Runták's collection

The SIGNAL II exhibition, prepared by the Telegraph Gallery in Olomouc, is a second presentation of contemporary art from Robert Runták's collection and includes photographs loaned by Ondřej Přibyl. SIGNAL I was conceived by curators Martin Drábek and David Vojtuš as a probe into the brain of a passionate art collector. SIGNAL II, prepared by curator Pavel Dvořák, presents artworks whose leitmotif is the loss of the physical experience of art, as embodied in the metaphor of disappearance. The exhibition will open at the Telegraph Gallery on Thursday, 22 July, at 6 PM and will run until 12 September 2021.

We're disappearing from the world. We're losing our bodies and abandoning our senses. We observe ourselves from somewhere high and far away through theories, models, networks, maps, screens, projectors, camera systems, and virtual reality. We have ceased to be part of the experienced world as its subject. We have become one of its objects, a thing that can be examined, dissected, defined, and analyzed. This is how curator PD described the leitmotif of the exhibition.

The exhibition presents more than thirty works of art by twenty-three contemporary artists from Robert Runták's collection, including paintings and sculptures. The exhibition also includes two photographs by Ondřej Přibyl, which are not part of the private collection but were lent by the artist himself.

The loss of the physical experience of an artwork, materialized in the metaphor of disappearance, is represented in the artworks on both spiritual and physical levels. In some works, it is tangible and apparent at first sight; in others, the visitors have to take their time. We complain that art is difficult to understand, that it has become elite, complex, detached from everyday problems, perhaps even incomprehensible. And instead of perceiving it, standing in front of it in ecstasy, becoming part of it, and entering into a conversation with it, we scan and analyze it, sort it, copy it, share it, and show it off. The more we talk about art, the less we communicate with it, explained the curator, adding that the only solution is to meet art face to face by visiting galleries.

SIGNAL is a series of regular art exhibitions, presenting art from Robert Runták's collection. The curators grow familiar with it during the preparation of the exhibition. Their choices are not based on continuous work and long-term knowledge of the collection, but rather on their aesthetic feeling and personal taste. Their selection and installation, however, have no limits.
